Guidelines:

- The opera needs to be suitable for performance by singers of Opera Factory (which may include young, amateur singers) and the music should not be unduly complex to learn.
- The compositions need to show awareness of practical and commercial realities of rehearsal and performance and carry a strong appeal to Opera Factory and other audiences with an emphasis on 'entertainment'.
- Due to casting practicalities, ethnic or roles with specific physical requirements are best to be avoided.
- The work must be performable with a piano accompaniment of two or four hands (1 or 2 pianos or 1 piano plus electronic keyboard scoring) and appropriate for young acoustic (unamplified) voices.
- Research & Google 'Short Operas' or checkout 'Operas with few roles' or 'Una Voce Molto Fa'
- Opera Factory has presented a number of successful short operas by Mozart, Rossini, Menotti, Norman (NZ), Wolf Ferrari and many others. What these have in common are brevity and simplicity.
- Check you have a basic understanding of theatre craft, dialogue, storytelling and vocal delivery.
- Understand the acoustics and limitations of unamplified voice.
- What's the story about – is it of public appeal? – is it suitable for all ages? – A comedy, tragedy or drama?
- Can it be easily cast and affordable to prepare, rehearse, produce, stage and present?
- Do not choose a story, subject or music that may be too enormous or difficult to perform.
- Remember to vary your score with arias, recitatives and small or chorus ensembles.
- Do not be afraid of melody!
